The U.S. Navy is planning to use armed robotic patrol boats with no sailors on board to escort and defend warships moving through sensitive sea lanes.

The technology, adapted from NASA's rovers on mars, will transform how the American navy operates and is sure to raise fresh questions and concerns about the widening role of robots in warfare.

The office of Naval Research has released the results of what it called an unprecedented demonstration in August involving 13 robotic patrol craft escorting a ship along the James river in Virginia.

In a simulated scenario, five of the robotic patrol boats guarded a larger ship, while eight others were ordered to investigate a suspicious vessel.

The unmanned patrol boats then encircled and swarmed the "target" enabling the mother ship to move safely through the area.

The demonstration, conducted over two weeks, was designed to "replicate a transit through a straight" naval research Chief Rear Admiral Matthew Klunder told reporters in a recent briefing.

The demonstration was a "break through" that goes far beyond any previous experiment, he said, adding that similar robotic patrol craft likely will be escorting U.S. naval ships within a year. The patrol craft, 11-metre long vessels, known in the military as rigid hulled inflatable boats, are usually operated by three or four sailors. But outfitted with the robotic system, a single sailor could oversee upto 20 of the vessels.

Unlike drone aircraft, such as the famed 'predator' and 'Reaper' planes, the robotic boats are more autonomous and can carry out directions without having to be operated by a human at every step.

"The excitement about this technology is it is autonomous" Mr. Klunder said.
